What to do (1/3)? (real life)

- I (a professor placed next door) was invited to collaborate – to provide the final proof for an idea to be published in a high rank journal.
- My data was not confirmatory, and reanalysis by others confirm my data.
- My professor college / collaborator went on to published his “story” ignoring my data, without telling me and without involving me.

What to do (2/3)? (real life)

- I (assoc. professor) brought forward an idea for which we applied funding. We had invited a collaborator on-board. The application was unsuccessful.
- One year later I by coincident see the list of successful applications for another foundation. Among these I find the name of my “collaborator” – with a project entitled the same as my original application and with the same abstract.
- I was not invited or aware of this.

What to do (3/3)? (real life)

- I (Post Doc) have been working for 3 years on a project before I had to leave UCPH.
- A year later I found “my” data published by my mentor without my knowledge and without my name.
